

Richard Cornes is a Senior Lecturer in Public Law and Director of Communications in the School of Law, at the University of Essex. He graduated BA/LLB(Hons) from Auckland University, was admitted as a Barrister and Solicitor of the High Court of New Zealand and then practised law at the New Zealand firm of Simpson Grierson in Auckland (in both commercial and public law teams). After a period in Australia, working for the Constitutional Centenary Foundation, and studying at The University of Melbourne (where he obtained a Graduate Diploma in International Law), he moved to London to take a post as a Senior Research Fellow at the Constitution Unit in the School of Public Policy at University College London. In September 2000 he moved to the School of Law, Essex University. He is responsible for the Department's core course in Administrative Law and also teaches on its LLM course in UK Human Rights and Public Law. His research areas include devolution in the United Kingdom, Administrative Law, and the structure and operation of the United Kingdom's Supreme Court. He is an Associate Member of Landmark Chambers London, and an elected member of the University Senate and Council.
